Petitioner submission of 20 September 2020

If the Scottish Public Service Ombudsman (SPSO) does not use the relevant frameworks and law to assess a case, then the normal man has no other option. A judiciary hearing is out of the remit of most people and does not cover this issue so there is no way to achieve a reasonable result on a complaint if the SPSO is not able to provide one.

In my case, I have now reached this point and am financially prohibited from achieving a reasonable end to my case and I am being forced out into the court system for small claims or simple procedure as the SPSO has neither been able to assess my full complaint or assess it within the relevant frameworks and law.
